

B4

Tuesday, Nov. 21, 1967

THE WASHINGTON POST

says he and his wife will live when he becomes head of the Kennedy Center here . . . There is still a very good chance that the Soviet Embassy on 16th Street is going to go on the market. One informed Russian source says that the property may have a "For Sale" sign out front when the Russians get ready to move their new location on Wisconsin Avenue.

Czech Chancery

A Washington homeowner yesterday asked a U.S. District Court judge to issue an injunction to prevent the Czechoslovakian government from building a chancery at 2612 Tilden st. nw.

Attorney Kevin Charles argued on behalf of David Tamac, of 2600 Tilden st., that a building permit issued the Czech government by the District in 1962 was no longer valid.

The permit was issued by the Department of Licenses and Inspections, also named as a defendant in the suit filed earlier this month. On Oct. 7, 1963, L&I Director J. J. Ilgenfritz notified the

JOSEPH J. ILGENFRITZ
... permit controversy

Embassy that he was withdrawing the permit because, although excavation had begun within six months of the permit's being issued, construction had not been completed within that time.

In May of this year Ilgenfritz reissued the permit after the corporation counsel's office said that he had erred in canceling

From staff reports and news dispatches

Lifts Chancery Ban

The House approved three bills yesterday that would allow foreign countries to locate chancery buildings in presently restricted residential areas.

One of the measures would permit six countries to build on property that they owned at the time Congress passed legislation prohibiting chanceries in residential areas. The countries are France, Greece, India, Italy, New Zealand and Turkey.

The second bill would open up for chancery use a house at 2344 Massachusetts ave. nw. owned by Jeane L. Dixon, Washington real estate executive. The third measure would exempt from the ban three houses formerly used as chanceries but vacant at the time the law was passed. One of the properties, a house at 2204 R st. nw., is owned by the in-laws of former Rep. Howard W. Smith (D-Va.), and is occupied by Niger.